Wednesday, March 10, 2010

Colo Railroad Builders, a leading provider of railroad construction and maintenance services to shortline and Class 1 railroads, has added three new offices, one in Kansas and two in Texas.

Terry Benton, general manager of Colo Railroad Builders (L.A. Colo, LLC), said, "We are responding to demand from large industrial and shortline customers to expand our services. I believe companies who rely on railroad contractors are now demanding a new level of service and professionalism. They are asking for maintenance programs custom designed to their needs, a program that gives them greater assurance their track is being maintained safely, cost effectively and to the highest standards."

The new offices are located in Wichita, Kan., and Lubbock and Brownsville, Texas.

Colo offers ongoing needs assessment, written plans, budgeting support, preventative as well as demand based maintenance programs.
